A play tower for children large and small

Dagonet is the perfect choice for playgrounds where several age groups play together. At ground level children will discover the treasure chest, but does the key fit? And what is the hidden treasure? The treasure chest has several movable parts and is designed to encourage role-play, while also stimulating children's fine motor skills and hand-eye coordination. Skilled climbers can scale the vertical climbing wall panel to reach the platforms. Or you can use the steps before crossing the swaying suspension bridge. From here, children can whizz down the tube slide.

Role-play is important for children's development

The unique symbols and activities of the LEDON Castle series are, of course, also featured in the Dagonet play environment. The illusion of being in a real knight's castle is complete with the knight's shield. With its rotating sword à la 'spin the bottle', it is sure to spark children's imagination. In their imagination and during role-play, children try out situations which they might not otherwise have dared or been able to do in real life. Role-play is therefore important when it comes to processing feelings. Role-play strengthens many different abilities, including children's imagination and creativity, while teaching them social rules as well as how to compromise, negotiate and resolve conflicts.
